Precise and clear-cut answers .Derivation and characterization of an adenoviral vector expressing the herpes simplex virus type 1 thymidine kinase gene. The herpes simplex virus (HSV)-thymidine kinase (tk) gene was subcloned into the adenovirus vector pAdlox. The vector was shown to replicate in most cell lines, but not in those that are normally permissive for wild-type adenovirus. The TK gene was expressed in transduced cells and the sensitivity of the transduced cells to 5-fluorodeoxyuridine was comparable to that of HSV-TK+ cells. { mHttpContext.setAttribute("data", data.getData()); break; } } } catch (Exception e) { Log.e("e", e.getMessage(), e); mHttpContext.setAttribute("msg", "send failed! A: The way you are doing it you are making a new problem. Try this, where  $f$  is the CDF and  $g$  is the PDF of the standard normal distribution. Find the inverse of  $(g(x)-p)=f(x)-(1-p)$

$p=\frac{f(x)}{g(x)-f(x)}$   $p=\frac{1}{g(x)-f(x)}$  This will give you the CDF of the standard normal distribution. Do the same for the PDF of the standard normal distribution and you will get the PDF.
