The effect of mercuric chloride on the integrity of the microcirculation and the cell cycle of the liver was studied in adult non-inbred male albino rats. Experimental intoxication was carried out by an intravenous injection of aqueous solution of mercuric chloride. The results suggest a damage to the microcirculation (intra-arterial transit time, functional capillary density) and a disturbance of the cell cycle, which was demonstrated by reduced labelling index of the hepatocytes, the number of cells in G0 and G1 phase and mitotic index. A possible relationship of the damage to the microcirculation to the disturbance of the cell cycle is discussed.Stone of Elchonsar The ba244e880a
