filmsThe San Francisco Bay Area is a hotbed for creative people. It's home to the Bay Area Art Institute, the M.F.A. Art Institute, and a number of excellent art schools. And it's known for its music scene, from the Fillmore and the Crocodile Cafe in the '60s to the current hotbed of the Mission and 24th Street. But the area is also home to a number of less recognized institutions. Take the offices of the '80s pop band Veruca Salt, which was known for songs like "Eenie Meenie" and "Cannonball" and contained three members who went on to record successful solo albums. For the band's bassist, Steve Hanft, it's a low-key office full of bohemian-style posters. But for the last 18 years, it's been the site of a secret cabal of almost 300 individuals who swap stories and plans and ideas and dreams. Every other week, they get together for a study group, called the Anomaly, that meets for two hours. They're all musicians, writers, designers, scientists, mathematicians, and businesspeople. They're all people who think they're artists, and they're all turned on by the idea of being a part of something greater than themselves. "If a bunch of different people come together and form a group that has a mission or a purpose or a goal, a lot of times, it's the way for someone else to join the group," says Anomaly participant Joshua Mendelson. "I think it helps us realize that we have the capacity to create something of value and to improve the world, that we have something to contribute to the world that's bigger than our individual selves." Introduction. A few months after Rami Malek's historic role as Freddie Mercury in Bohemian Rhapsody, he brings his alchemy to another role that has dazzled audiences for the last 30 years. In Pirates of the Caribbean: Dead Men Tell No Tales, Malek plays Jack Sparrow, a carefree pirate who, upon inheriting a cursed treasure map, embarks on a hunt for the fabled Fountain of Youth. He finds it with Barbossa (Geoffrey Rush), a pirate who only desires the bounty of its power. But this is a far cry from what fans of the franchise may expect. "Pirates (2005)" was released in the United States on October 26, 2005. The movie was written and directed by Alexandre Aja, with a screenplay by Stuart Beattie, story by Jeffrey Boam, and produced by Jerry Bruckheimer. Christina Aguilera and Joe Jonas covered "Last Stand" by John Lennon during the 2011 NHL Stadium Series game. Over the duration of the day, a seemingly small act turned into a viral phenomenon. The version covered by Aguilera and Jonas was actually recorded as the opening theme for the film Pirates of the Caribbean: At World's End. Aguilera's version of the song was released on April 1, 2011. The video was filmed at the Audio Video Unlimited (AVU) studios in Culver City, California. Many of the scenes were shot inside the studio's large soundstage where sets and backdrops were used for the movie. The video features many scenes involving the band's "Party in the U.S.A." concert in Los Angeles in front of an audience of 50,000 fans, along with intercut scenes of the band members preparing for their live show at the International Center for the Performing Arts in Manila, Philippines. It was directed by Anthony Mandler and edited by Gavin Carr. "Party in the U.S.A." is the third single from the group's 2d92ce491b
