Ogunwo-Olarinhen said, "For now, the bank is not accepting cash payment for fuel account. We hope the payment will resume as soon as the strike ends." She said the bank's decision is based on principle. "The bank believes that cash payments will continue to affect the delivery of quality services to its customers," the bank said. "We believe that cash deposits at the bank should come with some regulations including reporting requirements, which would reduce fraud and contribute to the overall stability of the Nigerian banking system. We do not want to get trapped in the habit of accepting cash deposits which we may not enjoy the benefits of. "The Nigerian banking system is not well-governed, and as a result there are no other banking laws that govern the business of banks. Our people cannot be locked out of the banks as long as they deposit cash in their accounts. The situation has to be regulated. "We want the public not to panic or have undue fear of banking systems d4474df7b8
