I have never had this problem before. Tested on multiple PC's on multiple operating systems. Yes I have the recent Steam Service Pack 3. I have tried both browsers, Chrome and Firefox. And I have tried both using either directly from the site and using an online wrapper like BitComet. All the same. Something is wrong with Youtube. I even tried a DHT proxy (throttled to the maximum and using OpenDNS in the meantime, as I had seen someone else using that in another thread) and that didn't work. The proxy is useless now. The problem is still there. I can't just block the Youtube it's the one thing I depend on to play Need For Speed and I can't access it. I'm not getting any error messages on the browser, nor am I getting any error messages from my ISP, nor is Google keeping me in quarantine, as they say. Any other suggestions? I'm using Windows 10 on an Acer laptop, and I'm not really sure what else to do. Any help would be much appreciated. Note that I'm linking my ISP's DNSs to the external DNS provided by OpenDNS since I'm already using it in connection with this issue (though why that wouldn't work with a DHT has me stumped). Dec 22, 2012 I downloaded a demo crack version of the game to try it out. It was a demo version that did not allow the player to race, only to test the game mechanics and auto-drive. The auto drive was disabled so it could be speed driven. At the end of the game the player could then pick 1 of 4 different cars and then drive said car on the track..
