ReflectionCreator is a free utility designed for creating reflections for text or images. If you like the tutorial and you find the program useful, then you can purchase a license key for ReflectionCreator from here (Affiliate Link) You might have noticed over the past several months that every major media outlet in the country has been running with the same exact headline: “Donald Trump is talking about the Mexicans.” The theory is that, as the 2016 campaign drags on, as the media have been scouring the Republican presidential campaign for stories on their favorite contender, they keep coming across the same thing: Donald Trump is talking about the Mexicans. And that’s bad for Trump. “Donald Trump is talking about the Mexicans,” was a refrain that ran from February to this month, as we watched Trump debate, or talk to Mike Pence, or denounce Mexican immigrants at his rallies. Almost never has he talked about the topic directly. It’s the media's job to provide context, but the media simply cannot produce a bunch of stories about Trump talking about the Mexicans without creating a tone that Trump is racist. It's a no-win situation. But today, on Trump's Facebook page, he just directly addressed the issue that the media has been pushing for days. He did not mention Mexicans by name, but he did refer to them as "murderers and rapists" of American citizens. When you get right down to it, this isn't really a story about Donald Trump's immigration policy, because there is no immigration policy. What this story really is about is whether or not Donald Trump is a racist. So far, he has said very little, and even in that little has been contradictory. Just a few days ago, he appeared to call Mexican immigrants rapists. There is a huge difference between talking about Mexican immigrants and talking about all immigrants. The latter is talking about people who come to this country in a legal way, and to a degree, who have contributed to this country. The former, however, is talking about the people that litter the border with this country. The people that are also mowing the lawns, are paying taxes and are generally just trying to make a living. If we're not talking about all of these things, then we'

without any trouble. There's nothing worth mentioning about the interface since it has a simplistic look. The good part is that the options are intuitive enough to be configured even by users who haven't operated similar software before. Adjustable reflection size, opacity and axis A default image and text is loaded to demonstrate how ReflectionCreator works, which can be accessed in two separate tabs. You can open any image file from the computer and write any text. Evidently, the reflection has a mirroring effect. The top side of the window has adjustable bars responsible with the reflection size, opacity start and end, along with the reflection axis. Changes can be observed in real time so there's no need to click any buttons to view the end result, nor to undo changes if you're not pleased. Simple reflection maker for text and images What the program is missing is a zooming mode to better spot finer details. Once you're ready, you can create new graphic files with PNG, JPG, GIF and BMP format. Taking everything into account, although it doesn't have richer features, ReflectionCreator offers a simple and straightforward solution for creating reflections to any picture or text with minimum effort. Just a couple of minutes with
