You can extract the tag BODY from your HTML files. It has two modes of operation. The utility processes correctly the documents containing repeating tag BODY. The register of record (uppercase or lowercase) has no value. Element BODY will be taken if rules of record of code HTML were made truly. In the mode of "innerHTML": The tags in the document can be changed and not saved in the HTML. This operation applies to the HTML files. Unicode: In Unicode characters are different than in ASCII in the characters and reserved characters. In order to recognize HTML characters and reserved words in Unicode, you must take into account the UTF-8 format. You can convert the Unicode characters from the file (Unicode characters) to the ASCII characters. In the example below. The characters between the tags are assigned to Unicode. Similarly, the additional tags are ignored. Even if the user does not assign a character, it will be always taken into account. Otherwise, the characters will be ignored. Registry: Some of the commands were designed to manipulate the HTML registry of HTML. In order to protect pages from being duplicated or copied, only specific commands, can be applied to the pages. For example: · "innerHTML", "outerHTML" · "__GET" · etc Other commands that were added to manage the pages and messages of the Internet. For example: · "style" · "script" · "script" · "frame" In-line comments: In-line comments are like comments, the difference is that they are within the elements themselves. These elements are not attached to the header and footer.
