The views expressed in this publication are those of the author(s) and do not necessarily reflect the opinion of JD Supra or its staff. The next installment of JD Supra's self-studies for developers covers functional programming, and with the release of Java 8 the concept of lambdas is back in the spotlight. This time, we'll take a look at Java 8's new functional programming features, including the Streams API, the elimination of the collections framework, the introduction of a new syntax for lambda expressions, the removal of generics from the programming language, and much more. We'll also explore some tools for testing and debugging, and we'll discuss Java 8 features that can enhance the performance of your code. Finally, we'll take a look at some of the new features in JDK 8 that are specific to the compiler. Sybase IQ is the database management system for demanding business environments and SAP HANA is its successor. It offers the same, if not even more, functionality. At O'Reilly's Up & Running conference this year we will see one of the most interesting and diverse architectures presented to date. Sybase IQ is a server-based DBMS, designed for a broad range of clients. HANA on the other hand is an in-memory, column-oriented database for scale-out solutions. It's being offered as an alternative to Sybase SQL Anywhere and Oracle in addition to the already well-known products of SAP. Azure Table Storage is a highly scalable, globally distributed, service designed for applications that need to store and access unstructured data in real-time. But storage isn't the only challenge you face in building reliable mobile apps. Being mobile means your users can access your app from any device and Internet connection. If your app isn't working well on mobile devices, it will never work well. This course will teach you the basics of design for Mobile apps and how to use the most up-to-date techniques to build a dynamic, responsive and responsive mobile app for Android and iOS. Introduction Last month, we presented a project called O2mon, a program for monitoring mobile network traffic.
