One of the main features of the 3 oscillators is the ability to create custom waveforms by selecting points from a MIDI keyboard. These can be points along curves and lines, or sets of frequencies. For example, you can use the waveform editor to create a sound similar to an arpeggiator, with the two oscillators set up like the notes of a scale. Of course, you can also use the oscillators in combination with other modes to create new tones. You can create an advanced sound design workflow with the Curve synthesizer. The synthesizer features a sophisticated modulation matrix that allows you to generate controlled modulation sweeps with the synthesizer, oscillator and filter at the same time. This allows you to shape, reverse, invert and loop sounds as you create music. You can also use the synths to create sounds that would be impossible to produce with a keyboard. Finally, Curve also includes the Curve Analyzer, a collection of powerful tools that allow you to create sounds based on their spectral content, create new waveforms, and get insights into the nuances of sounds. So, in a nutshell, Curve is a tool that brings the sound design process to the next level by providing a collection of tools that inspire a new generation of sounds. All the most exciting sounds

Creating mixes is more than mixing down the preamps and microphone and sending it to a mixing board. The natural sound of voice is made from the vibrating air inside your mouth. When you inhale, you create a certain pressure and a certain amount of air flow, which is the sound you hear as voice. The same principles work when you record it on a microphone. But there is one thing that is different when you record in the studio: The studio microphone has a preamp that sends the sound from the mic to the soundcard, where it is converted into a digital signal. This signal can be digitally manipulated further to produce amazing sound results. A typical soundcard has inputs that are not sensitive to the details of the sound, but only to the total amount of sound that is present. This usually results in the sound of voice being turned down, which is why most mixing rooms have a compressor that reduces the amount of the recorded sound for everyone to listen to. The purpose of a compressor is not to reduce the noise, but to reduce the level of the noise. You do not want the amount of noise to be too high; otherwise, it can become a distraction and turn the mix down. The compressor has settings for cutting out the noise or reducing it to a minimum. But the compressor's sole purpose is to make the volume of the sound higher. This is why every mixer is connected to a volume control, and every compressor has a gain control. A compressor can add nothing but a gain to the audio signal. A compressor does not change the audio, but it amplifies the sound.
