Patients with portal hypertension are at increased risk for hepatic encephalopathy (HE). Calcium channel antagonists (CCAs) and β-adrenoceptor antagonists (β-blockers) are effective for treating portal hypertension. The aim of this study was to compare the effects of monotherapy and combination therapy with CCAs and β-blockers on portal hypertensive rats. Rats underwent sham or common bile duct ligation (BDL) operation. Sham-operated rats were treated with vehicle or CCAs or β-blockers for 14 days. BDL-operated rats were treated with vehicle or CCAs or β-blockers for 7 days. The degree of portosystemic shunting and portal vein pressure were measured. The serum level of tight junction proteins, zonula occludens-1 (ZO-1) and occludin were determined. The mRNA level of claudin-1, claudin-3 and claudin-8 in the liver was measured. The increase in the degree of portosystemic shunting and portal vein pressure in the BDL group was significantly suppressed by the combination therapy with CCAs and β-blockers. The serum level of ZO-1 and occludin in the BDL group were significantly higher than those in the sham group. However, the serum level of ZO-1 and occl
